Dead Sea Scrolls Themselves Slated To Be Displayed in Palestine Museum

An added attraction for tour- ing the holy sites in Jordan will ists who will be visiting the see not only the very places Biblical sites in Jordan in the where Christ founded his monocoming months will be the dis- theistic faith but also the anplay of the Dead Sea scrolls themselves.

The Tourism Department of the Government of Jordan, in cooperation with the Department of Antiquities, is setting up plans to exhibit those ancient documents in the Palestine Archaeological Museum in Arab Jerusalem.

Thus, visitors to the Bible Lands will have an opportunity to see the scrolls—copper, bronze, and parchment as well—which have been discovered in the Khirbet Qumram caves in the northwest corner of the Dead Sea in the territory of Jordan.

Plans are underway to set up a special section in the Museum so that tourists will have an opportunity to inspect these historical treasures, a Tourist department spokesman said, a large Rence, those who will be visit.

The recent joint announcement on the scrolls by the University of Manchester in England and the Department of Antiquities in Amman indicate that the history of the first century before Christ may be rewritten in the light of information contained on two scrolls—made either of copper or bronze. The work of deciphering hese scrolls has been going on for several months in Manchester. The ancient texts outline instructions on where to find buried treasure.

Work on deciphering other scrolls has been progressing simultaneously in the Museum in Jerusalem. Just as soon as these transcriptions of the founding of those faiths.

Many of us, perhaps, have come to accept the present period in medical science as "The Antibiotic Age." Thus, we may be inclined to take for granted an announcement of the discovery of a new antibiotic.

Yes, just such an announcement caused an uncommon degree of interest at the Third Annual Symposium on Antibiotics, held recently in Washington, D. C., where a team of New Jersey physicians described a new drug called Albamycin.

Guided by the knowledge that various bacteria have developed insensitivity to the usual, routinely prescribed antibiotics, the New Jersey doctors used Albamycin to treat a variety of human infections.
